AMMAN (Petra) — A meeting was held at the Ministry of Industry and Trade on Tuesday between a Jordanian team headed by Industry and Trade Minister Walid Asfour and the visiting Romanian delegation headed by Overseas Constructions Minister Ion Stanescu.

The two sides discussed ways of strengthening and developing economic and trade relations between the two countries. They also discussed trade balance between the two countries, which is in Romania's favour.

Mr. Asfour asked the Romanian delegation to work for increasing exports to Romania of Jordanian phosphates, which is the major Romanian import from Jordan to adjust the balance.

Mr. Assour said that "this is possible, particularly that Romania imports from Jordan only 20 per cent of its phosphate needs." He also asked the Romanian side to take necessary measures for opening trade centres in the two countries, and pointed out that the joint Jordanian-Romanian committee will meet soon to discuss trade ties between the two countries.

problems standing in the way of expanding the Jordan Petroleum Refinery Company--a project which is being implemented by a Romanian firm. Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — People in Jordan have to brace themselves for yet another 24 hours of cold, stormy and rainy weather.

Meteorology Department off-icials said that the atmospheric depression which has affected the country Sunday evening, "has moved northeast and is accompanied by several cold fronts and heavy rainfall."

Temperatures are expected still to remain around 7 degrees Centigrade at the daytime peak Wednesday, the officials told the Jordan Times, and more rain is expected to fall. Snow will fall on hilly regions, which are 900 metres above sea level, the officials

In Aqaba, the winds will be fresh with scattered showers and the sea rough.

Although last-minute estimates of the amount of rainfall are not available at the department, the officials said that the intermittent rainfall Tuesday" is good news for farmers, but they have to take special care of the cold tonight." Most roads in Jordan on Tuesday remained passable, and the visibility improved, public security sources said. No accidents were reported, they told the Jordan Times, but drivers are urged to drive carefully and avoid landslides.

The Jordan News Agency, Petra, reported that public defence units were able to rescue three citizens and several cars that veered into the Zarga River due to heavy rainfall. No other incidents were reported, Petra added.

Minister of Communication Mohammad Addoub Al Zaben said that the ministry's technicians have been working round the clock to repair the Jabai Hussein telephone cable which was knocked out due to the heavy rainfall and storms Monday, according to

Dr. Zaben said that work on the Jabal Amman telephone lines has been completed and cables from the second to the fourth circle and Zahran area are now connected, Petra said.

Dr. Zaben maintained, however, that this year's damages due to record rainfall and strong wind over the past two days were small compared to the damages caused by rainfall in previous years, according to Petra.

EEC condemns Israel

UNITED NATIONS (R) — The European Economic Community (EEC) Tuesday condemned Israel's annexation of the Golan Heights and East Jerusalem and said it regarded both actions as null and void.

Ambassador Edmonde Dever of Belgium was speaking Tuesday on behalf of the 10-nation community at an emergency special session of the General Assembly summoned to deal with Israel's recent decision to apply its laws to the territory taken from Syria in the 1967 war.

"The ten formally reaffirm that they consider the Dec. 14, 1981 law concerning the Golan Heights, as well as the fundamental law of July 31, 1980 concerning Jerusalem, as null and void and without juridical effect on the international level," she declared.

Ambassador Dever also said the members of the community warn the government of Israel about the consequences of these measures," which exacerbated the dangers of a situation that was already extremely tense and com-

"These arbitrary procedures, because of their provocative nature, seriously jeopardise the chances of finding a peaceful settlement in the Near East," she

The Belgian envoy said a peace settlement must be found within the context of respect for the legitimate rights of all states and all peoples of the region, in a climate of trust among all parties.

The community again urgently appealed to Israel to reverse its decision and to refrain from placing obstacles on the path leading to a comprehensive peace settlement, she added.

Ambassador Liang Yufan of China said the assembly should declare Israel's action null and void, impose sanctions, call on Israel to withdraw from all Arab territories occupied since 1967, and restore the national rights of the Palestinian people, including the right to establish their own state.

Referring to the United States, which last month vetoed a Security Council resolution calling for sanctions against Israel, Mr. Liang said one super power "blindly sides with Israel," providing it with large amounts of aid and recently establishing a strategic alliance with that country.

Alluding to the Soviet Union, he said the other super power tried to penetrate the region, sow discord among the Arab states and create turbulence "so as to fish in troubled waters and achieve its strategic objectives of expansion.

Gen. Sharon toured the West Bank Tuesday with visiting leaders of the United Jewish Appeal fund-raising organisation of the U.S. and reiterated Israel's opposition to the establishment of a Palestinian state.

He told reporters proposed autonomy for the West Bank and Gaza Strip "will not be a Palestinian state or a corridor to a Palestinian state.

Later, the Israeli army Tuesday dispersed some 50 Jewish settlers in Sinai in its first move against nationalists trying to obstruct Israel's withdrawal from the peninsula, military sources said.

Eyewitnesses said there was no violence when the army moved to evict the ultra-nationalists, who had been trying to obstruct the dismantling of a water pipeline near Quseima in northern Sinai. However one man was taken away the army sealed off the area to stop settlers calling in reinforcements from nearby Yamit, the focal point of resistance to the pullout, due before April 26. For months the government has shied away from confrontation with the settlers, and Gen. Sharon has up to now vetoed physical action against them.

With evacuation less than 100 days away, a group called The Movement to Stop the Withdrawal from Sinai has been moving more Jewish families into Yamit and nearby agricultural settlements.

The movement, backed by some members of Prime Minister Menachem Begin's coalition, is threatening to mobilise thousands of supporters to prevent evacuation forcibly.

The government has carmarked $264 million as compensation for uprooted settlers who leave Sinai peacefully. The huge payments have been strongly criticised by some members of Mr. Begin's cabinet and the opposition.

AMMAN (Petra) — The Royal Scientific Society's Building Research Centre (BRC) will start in three weeks a project to develop improved asphalt mixtures.

BRC Director Ruhi Al Sharif said that the JD 80,000 project will take three years to carry out. The cost of the project will go mainly for the salaries of researchers and engineers, as well as the purchase of equipment, materials and experimental mixtures, he said.

The National Planning Council has agreed to support the project with JD 24,000, to be paid over three years; while Amman Municipality will contribute JD 1,000 and the Jordan Petroleum Refinery Company JD 500.

Dr. Sharif noted that Jordan spends millions of dollars on highway projects every year, a great deal of which goes to waste as a result of the rapid deterioration of asphalt. The centre has found that it is very important to carry out research and studies on the actual condition of the highways, materials used and methods of mixing, so as to identify the sources of problems.

According to Dr. Sharif, samples of asphalt mixtures and gravel will be collected from highways under construction and from those built at different times in the past. for experimentation and com-

'Ain Ghazal: rescue dig revisited

AMMAN - The discovery of four more ancient burials, dating from 6000-7000 B.C., made during the previous two weeks of salvage archaeological excavation at the Pre-Pottery Neolithic B site of 'Ain Ghazal prompted the Jordan Times to make a mid-season assessment of the new hypotheses the research team has had to adopt on the basis of these and other excitmg finds.

The total number of skeletons the team has found now stands at seven, all of them buried under the floors of the houses in a tightly flexed, almost foetal position: what is now sometimes used as a method of concealing murder victims was then a normal way of burying the dead. A small hole was dug into the floor of the house, the body dropped in and the floor replastered.

The majority of the skeletal remains are those of young children. One grave contained two around the ages of six and ten, with a possibility of a third child being buried with them. Another vielded the lone remains of a child of 10, while the third seemed to contain the remains of a mother and infant, suggesting the possibility of the death of both at childbirth.

"It seems," said the co-director of the dig. Dr. Gary Rollefson very tentatively, "that, like at Beidah, there was a high rate of mortality among pre-adults. We really cannot say why, but this may have been due to nutritional diseases -as, contrary to popular opinion, agriculture does not necessarily make a healthy population. There was, perhaps, plenty of food available, but it would be of restricted variety.

New ideas have also arisen about the site itself.

"The site looks like it is linear in orientation, following the length of the Wadi Zarqa," Dr. Rollefson said. "This means it is differently oriented to the similar sites of Beidah and Jericho, which were roughly rectangular or circular

Although an assessment of the size of the site at 'Ain Ghazal is hampered by the fact that a large part of it has been destroyed, the team can say for certain that it was bigger than Beidah, and "in the size class of Jericho."

"Flints have been found right to the top of the hill," Dr. Rollefson said "but we do not know if the

There are at least 15 bouses exposed by the road-builders' cut which originally exposed the site, some of which were three stories tall. The walls, some still standing a metre and a half high, were entered by a metre-wide doorway and were made of stone set into mud mortar. These were plastered, first with mud and then finished by a type of white plaster. As the diggers have not as yet been able to reach the level where the walls meet the floor, they cannot tell whether the red mineral used to polish the plaster floors extends up the walls or not.

What the team has been able to determine, however, is that there were three major classes of floor. Some were not polished with red ochre at all but were left white: others had red polish from wall to wall, while plaster fragments of yet others "Suggest the possibility of a red design," said the dig's other co-director, Dr. Albert Leonard, Some of the floors show

Ten days ago, Meg Abu Hamdan reported about the initial expectations of a team of archaeologists that had started digging at a 9,000-year-old Neolithic site across the highway from the sewage treatment plant at 'Ain Ghazal, in east Amman. In this article, she returns to the site and talks to the dig leaders about what they have unearthed so far.

new homes, as there would possibly have been partial or complete terracing of the hillside. But until we dig a long east-west trench up the hill, we cannot prove

It is hoped that in the 1983 season at 'Ain Ghazal a geologist will join the team, who will be able to make judgements on the kind of sediment found between the floors. By knowing what caused the rubble to accumulate -- was it blown there, washed there by torrential rain or simply dumped there by man? - the team may learn why the houses -- and eventually the entire site were aba-

Various other finds at 'Ain Ghazal have strengthened some of the archaeologists' earlier suppositions, like the identification of five different varieties of domesticated plants and the discovery of around 25 sickle blades which supports the view that agriculture was an extensive and important occupation at the time. American Centre for Oriental Research Director David McCreery, using flotation techniques, discovered the charred remains of seeds of wheat, barley, fig. pea and lentil. The presence of the last, which is preserved only in rare cases, means that all other types of seed should also be preserved; so there is a possibility that more varieites of domesticates will be identified.

The large number of spearheads found, on the other hand, backs up the idea that the villagers of 6th-7th millenium B.C. 'Ain Ghazal still relied a great deal on hunting. Many of the spearheads have a particular kind of fracture at the tip, indicating that they had certainly been used. The chip would have been caused by the blade's hitting the bone of the animal. Dr. Rollefson thinks that the team may have found rather more spearpoints than were found either at Jericho or at Beidah.

A rather different kind of spearhead - one stained with the red ochre used on the floors - was bund buried with the two chi-A stone bowl is excavated with tender loving care by a voluntee dren. Perhaps symbolic the speevidence of having been repaired

The many well-preserved animal bones that have been unearthed are awaiting analysis, as are the pollen samples that were taken from every area of soil that had been sealed by a floor and thus had remained uncontaminated by later periods.

Money from an anonymous donor has enabled the team to plan another six-week season in March. Before that begins they have just three weeks in which to clear and analyse the backlog of unprocessed finds, and to write reports, one of which will be for the Department of Antiquities. which funded the initial dig. But before they end this first season at Ain Ghazal in a week's time, Dr. Rollefson, Dr. Leonard and their team hope to expose two more floors, with all the artifacts in place, in order to give an idea of the pattern of living in these bouses some 9,000 years ago. They also intend to preserve three of the burials, which are in great danger of being destroyed.

We wonder....

IT HADTO happen. At some point, one always suspected, the United States would bring Hollywood and television into its global confrontation with the Soviet Union, and the result, predictably, has been a rather poor show, literally and otherwise. We are referring to the television show entitled Let Poland Be Poland that was broadcast in the United States on Sunday and also beamed to viewers throughout the world.

It is painful to see a country that is as awesome and as amazing as the United States make a laughing stock of itself with this kind of performance. We are equally surprised at the several West European leaders who agreed to participate in the show.

The United States, for all its good things, has much to learn about diplomacy, international relations and dealing with the rest of the world. Our suggestion to the Americans is — relax. The events in Poland, grave as they may be, are not going to be effected by a television extravaganza. The most effective thing that Americans can do to win friends and allies around the world is simply to be themselves. It is only when the natural spirit of America is twisted by its nervous and often mercantile politicians that the formulation and conduct of American foreign policy are transformed into comic book sagas.

It is not a pleasant thing to watch the United States act as it did this week, or as it has always acted in the Arab-Israeli arena. We continue -- despite all the odds -- to wonder what the world would be like if the leaders and the decision-makers of the United States were to conduct themselves as honourably, fairly and humanely as the ordinary people of the United States. What a lovely thought.

Intensive-care units in hospitals

By Dr. Awn Rifai

The health authorities in Jordan are continuously taking measures to furnish the hospitals with the most up-to-date medical equipment. The reluctance in the establishment of clinics and hospitals in some parts of the country can partly be attributed to the relatively high cost of such equipment. One of the essential medical facilities that have been supplied to a number of our hospitals is the intensivecare unit (ICU).

The ICU is utilised in the hospital to monitor regularly the symptoms and conditions of the patient, and to guarantee him the greatest amount of protection. This unit is particularly useful with patients suffering from acute illnesses, or those recuperating after surgery, or victims of heart failure and other grave illnesses.

In the ICU, the electronic monitoring equipment attached to the bedside relays the vital information to a central station or to an information centre in the nurse's room, thereby assisting the doctors on three counts:

First, the instrument transmits audio and visual alarms when any measurement recorded exceededs the values preset by the doctor. It is necessary for the central station to convey such information while discriminating against any false alarms, as may very well occur due to sudden movements by the patient.

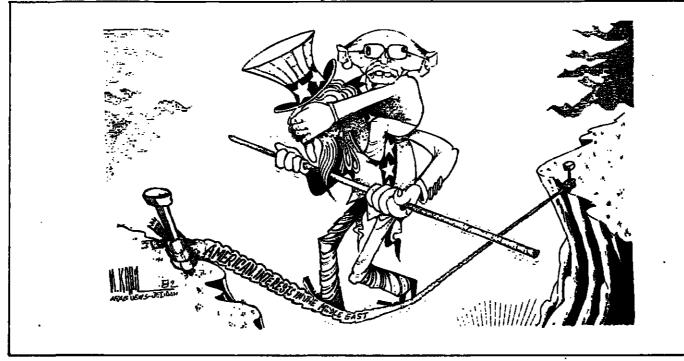

The second task performed by the centre is to display the vital data which enables the doctors to evade any potential risks at an early stage. In some instances, it is more helpful to record the data in graphical form in order to follow-up on the development of the patient's condition.

The third role of the central station is to provide a record of the cardiogram and of the blood pressure. Monitoring data during the few seconds preceding the time of the alarm is considered of paramount importance since it reveals the immediate causes of the alarm.

The electronic equipment expected to perform the above-mentioned tasks have been developed for increased efficiency. The new versions incorporate improved characteristics as per ease of operation, clarity of the screens in the visual units, and the elimination of false alarms. Whenever more than one alarm are transmitted simultaneously, the relevant information is stored in a special memory built within the ICU system. The more advanced models of ICUs have been designed with an automatic selftesting feature capable of regularly checking the operating validity of the various sections of the unit. Some spare standby circuits have also been included in the system in order to automatically takeover from their counterparts in case a fault develops in the latter.

The cost of designing and mass-producing ICUs is declining, thanks to the large-scale integrated electronic circuits. If available, computers can be connected to ICUs to carry out specific tasks usually performed by nurses, and to secure a higher degree of speed and precision in caring after the patients.

Revisiting inflation of small open economy

By Dr. Safwan S. Toqan

Fighters or shirkers?

ARAB PRESS COMMENTARY

AL RA'I: The Arab masses have the right to question the very nature of the logic and feelings of those who oppose Iraq and reject the call to support it by despatching volunteers. They also have the right to ask: Does being faithful to the usurped Arab rights in the Golan Heights. Jerusalem and the Palestinian tertitories mean the disavowal of Iraq's right to its territories and waters? Does being honest in trying to retrieve the rights of the Arabs mean that the Arab will practiced by the volunteers must be belitted?

Such questions are the reaction of the Arab masses to the behaviour of those people who were annoyed by the brave Jordanian stand by Iraq. These people who began to fabricate lies about the Jordanian stand should have born in mind that Israel had attacked Jordan's initiative which is the natural thing for Israel to do. But is it the natural thing for them to side with Israel?

The simple facts of Arab logic and feeling dictate that all the Arabs should be free to fight alongside Iraq if they wish. It is very strange to see those people who turned their backs on their Arab duty hide behind pan-Arabism. History will never forgive them their plotting and collaboration.

It is easy for the Arab masses to distinguish between the strugglers and the shirkers. They can never be deceived because they are the eyes and the conscience of this nation. These masses are not mere spectators because they have now joined the Iraqi fighters.

Treason unmasked

AL DUSTOUR: The members of the National Consultative Council yesterday declared total support for His Majesty King Hussein's initiative to help Iraq in its war against the Iranian enemy. The council's support for the King's brave stand and wise policy expresses the feelings of the Jordanian people and their commitment to their Arabism. It also expresses the will of the Arab Nation and its aspiration to establish Arab unity in order to confront the danger threatening Arab existence.

The members of the council stressed that the King's initiative aims at awakening the Arab conscience and the sense of Arab nationalism and at liberating the Arab will. The King's call is an honest one which is why it has received such a response from the Jordanians who answered the King's appeal and hastened to volunteer in the Yarmouk Force in order to stand by their Iraqi brothers on the battlefront on the eastern gate.

The Council also expressed the opinion of the Arab Nation when it denounced and condemened the plotters and the shirkers in some Arab countries. The Arab people understand the flimsy excuses and justifications voiced by these people in order to cover for their cowardice and treason. Those who shirk their duty towards Iraq will also shirk their duties towards other Arab countries nor will they participate in the Arabs' battle against the Zionist enemy. These people who have sided with the Iranian enemy, Israel and the United States will adopt the same policy towards any Arab battle waged against any enemy. Those who once advocated slogans about Arabism are now supporting the Persian and Zionist enemies against Iraq. Their masks have dropped at the first real test.

Having read with utmost interest the weekly column written by Dr. Jawad Ahmad in the Jordan Times of January 14-15, 1982, it is quite hard not to respond, positively, to his invitation to participate in discussing topics that are not only relevant to the Socio-Economic problems facing Jordan, but also for the sake of scientific investigation and dialogue.

At the outset, I would like to ask the layman to bear with me if this article is a bit technical, as I feel that the proper place for it is a specialised journal rather than a daily newspaper; but in the absence of such a journal, this is mainly meant for readers who have at least some basic formal training in economics. Furthermore, I cannot but assert that this essay is in reply to Dr. lawad Ahmad's ideas and to Dr. Nabulsi's ideas as rephrased by Dr. Ahmad in the column of January 1415,

My subject matter is the inflationary situation in Jordan and the major factors that contribute to it. Specifically, I would like to take issue with Dr. Ahmad and Dr. Nabulsi with respect to the following two questions: First, the relation between the world price level (or world rate of inflation) and the domestic price level (or domestic rate of inflation) in the case of a small open economy. Second, the extent of the impact of the government budget on the domestic price level (or domestic rate of inflation).

According to Dr. Ahamd, Dr. Nabulsi argues that inflation in Jordan is predominantly imported, meaning that domestic prices or changes in such prices are to be explained by international prices or changes in them, respectively. Dr. Nabulsi goes on to produce the evidence on the correlation between the two variables without, rightly so, inferring the direction of cansality. If the empirical relation between domestic prices and international prices has been found to be significant, no interesting conclusions could be derived without providing a proper a priori explanation for such a relation. Furthermore, any two variables moving in the same direction, such as sugar production and the price of shares of the Arab Bank, could be strongly correlated with a coefficient close to unity, and still indicate no meaningful relation. Hence, it is necessary first to lay down the theoretical foundation and, then look for the empirical evidence that supports it by resorting to available tecbniques for analysing timeseries data such as the lead. and lag technique.

Without going into the later, seeking an a priori explanation will necessarily takes us to a basic assumption underlying that fascinating simple model of perfect competition. This is the assumption of multibuyer multi-seller market where no single buyer or seller could affect the price (price-taker).

(price-taker). The above assumption is applicable to the case of a small open economy. The assumption of a small open economy, meaning that such a country is a price-taker, is at the heart of the problem. It is not necessary, for inflation to be imported, that imports should comprise a large proportion of gross domestic product. What is needed is that most of the goods are traded, be it of foreign production (imports) or locally produced (exports).

Jordan's economy is a small open economy if compared with such giants as the U.S.A or Japan or some European countries. Prices and changes in such prices of goods and services are determined by all buyers and all sellers in each and every international market irrespective of whether such goods compose a large proportion of gross domestic product in Jordan or not. Jordan could buy or sell any quantity of any traded good at the prevailing price without leaving an impact on the internationally set price.

This a priori explanation of the fact that domestic prices pegged to international prices indicate why there is a high degree of correlation between domestic and international rates of inflation. Furthermore, it answers the question raised by Dr. Jawad Ahmad concerning the deflationary effect, if any, of any increase in the quantity of imports on the domestic price levels.

Having, hopefully, settled the issue of the openness of the economy, I turn now to deal with the second question, namely, the effect of the government budget on inflation. Dr. Nabulsi suggests that foreign aid which finances 60 per cent of total government expenditures is one of the most important factors of domestically induced inflation. To analyse such a hypothesis, I am forced to revert to David Hume's Treatment of Specie Flows revived during the seventies as the Theory of the Monetary Approach to the Balance of Payment. At this juncture, it is probably important to keep in mind the difference between the above approach and the monetarist approach which is mainly manifested by the quantity theory of money. The monetarist theory explains world inflation as a result of an excess of the growth rate of the world money stock over the growth rate of world output. Given the small open country assumption, an extension of the "law of one price" determines each country's rate of inflation.

As it would be inappropriate for me to spell out in detail what the monetary approach to the BOP consists of, I find it only necessary to mention what such a theory invokes with respect to the inflationary situation in Jordan. The monetary approach to the BOP which assumes that domestic prices are pegged to world prices asserts that surpluses (deficits) in the BOP are nothing more than mirror images of excess demand (supply) in the money market. Given that the demand for money is stable and that the monetary base is composed of foreign. money (foreign reserves) and national money (domestic credit), any change in foreign reserves (due to foreign aid) will find its way into the commodity market. When government expenditures increase, there will be an excess supply of money which will vanish by an increase in imports and decrease in exports, thus leading to a reduction in foreign assets. This means that there will be no impact, especially in the long run, on the. domestic price level. However, changes in relative prices could occur in the short

To put it in stronger words, any attempt by the monetary authority of a small open economy to reduce the rate of inflation by manipulating the domestic component of money supply could be sterlised by an equ-. ivalent change in the foreign component of the money supply in the opposite direction. As David Hume wrote in the 18th century "All water, whenever it communicates, remains always at a level....".

Provoking reaction

By Tareq Masarweh

We do not care a great deal for the few negative Arab comments on the Jordanian stand since some Arab brothers have always been against Iraq and its regime whether Iraq was involved in a war against Iran or anybody else. These same brothers are not speaking about the Zionist danger as an incentive for stroggle but only to cover for their political behaviour both at home and on the Arabarena. How could this danger prevent them from supporting Iraq and at the same time permit dispatching weapons and missiles to Iran?

What has provoked us here is the negative stand of the United States which was declared by the U.S. State Department official spokesman. Washington is concerned "not to enlarge the circle of war" by allowing Jordanian and non-Jordanian Arab-citizens the freedom to stand by their Iraqi brothers by volunteering to fight in a war Iraq is fighting to defend its territories, the unity of its people, and the Arabism, stability and future of the Arabian Gulf and Peninsula.

Washington is rejecting the Jordanian stand because it, as it says, is against "enlarging the circle of war." Just like other capital cities, Washington wants the war to continue. It wants to keep Iraq preoccupied from the issues of the Arab Nation. It wants a battered Iraq that cannot mobilise for the pan-Arab battle. Washington, after isolating Egypt from its nation, wants to force Iraq out of the Arab-Israeli conflict and to keep the status quo in Lebanon. Washington wants to peddle something which is far more dangerous after Camp David.

Were the war to be enlarged by a decisive Arab stand, it would have come to an end a year ago; and the Tehran regime would have realised that exporting the "revolution" is impossible. But since the very start, Washington wished for this to be and to last. Why else should Jimmy Carter have tolerated Israel's breach of the han imposed on Iran during the U.S. hostage crisis by sending weapons and spare parts to Tehran? Why is Washington silent on the reexportation by Israel of "arms given in aid" to Iran, although the first condition it imposes on the states that receive such weapons is that this reexportation of weapons to a third party must not take place unless approved by the United States?

Washington does not have the right to assess Jordan's political behaviour towards an Arab country like Iraq. It has no right either to approve or to reject. We are not here the banana republics of Central America. We are an Arab people who belong to the one nation that includes Iraq in the same way it does the states structules from the country to the Culf etching from the ocean to the Gulf.

We reject Washington's stand and we feel provoked. If Washington's interests mean the continuation of the war, then our interest is to enlarge this war and to end it because the enemy of Iraq and the Arabs is the Zionist entity which has been put on our lands by the support of the forces of oppression and aggression in this world.

U.S. hastens to help Morocco

By Marc Delteil

RABAT (R) — Few Third World countries can have seen such an impressive procession of high-ranking U.S. officials in such a short time as Morocco in the last three months.

This burst of friendliness raised questions whether this 14-centuries-old North African kingdom was either so vital to Washington or in need of such support.

"Both are true," a U.S. diplomat said, noting that Morocco was important because it commanded the strategic straits of Gibraltar but also that Washington would not drop an old ally weakened by a six-year war against guerrillas fighting for ind-inst guerrilias fighting for independence of the western Sahara.

The United States has done much under President Reagan to offset financial and military difficulties resulting from this bitter war against polisario guerrillas openly backed by Libya and Alg-

Dozens of U.S. trade officials and businessmen flocked in last month to look into larger investments and bilateral co-operation, including in the key sectors of agriculture, oil and fis-

Led by Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, the visitors were the latest of a series of U.S. delegations which came here in the past three months, mainly on defence and security missions.

They included Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger, his Assistant for International Security Matters Francis West, Central Intelligence Agency Deputy Director Admiral Bobby Inman, Defence Intelligence Agency (DIA) Director James Williams and President Reagan's special envoy Gen. Vernon Walters.

U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig had also been expected in December but postponed his visit because of the Polish crisis, while King Hassan II is due to visit the United States next Spring.

The newly-appointed U.S.

Ambassador to Rabat, Joseph Verner Reed, said the United States had taken a number of concrete steps, which he would not disclose, to help Morocco counter the use of an increase quantity of advanced weaponry on the Polisario side.

This followed the Western Sahara's biggest battle, at Guelta Zenmour, an isolated garrison that Morocco eventually evacuated after suffering heavy losses last October.

Soviet-made SAM-6 missiles were used by non-Africans in the battle, King Hassan charged in an appeal for increased Western aid.

While no concrete evidence of his assertion has emerged, the Reagan administration responded by boosting its military assistance to Morocco to $30 million this year, and even more later.

Underlined by a call in Tangier last month of six Sixth Fleet warships, including two nuclear-powered carriers, increased U.S. support for Morocco dates back to president Reagan's first steps as president, a year ago.

Fifty-two U.S. hostages held for 444 days in Iran had just been released thanks to Algeria's mediation.

President Reagan hailed Algeria for its help but announced shortly afterwards that he would supply Morocco with antiguerrilla planes and over 100 combat tanks it had long wanted—a move that a Western ambassador in Algiers said amounted with the guerrillas.

A U.S. diplomat said the Reagan administration had to make it clear which countries were regarded as definite friends of Washington. This was Morocco's case but not that of Algeria, whose army was mainly equipped with Soviet weapons and whose foreign policy the United States regarded as somewhat ambiguous.

The capture of a Soviet-made T-55 tank from the Polisario in southern Morocco earlier last month provided Morocco with a fresh opportunity to declare it was victim of an East-West conflict, something King Hassan has always maintained.

Moroccan military sources noted the tank was not in service in the Moroccan army and could only have been supplied by the Soviet Union through Algeria or Libya, but in any case with good economic relations with Moscow's blessing.

This led one of King Hassan's closest aides, Minister of State Ahmed Alaoui, to suggest that the Soviet Union should stop arming the guerrillas, even indirectly, if it was to maintain good economic relations with Morocco.

The Kingdom is one of Moscow's main trading partners in the Third World, with a $5 billion deal providing for the supply of Moroccan phosphates to the Soviet Union over 30 years.

Mr. Alaoui said Moscow badly needed the phosphates and should encourage "its friends and those it floods with arms" to end what he said was not only aggression against what Morocco regards as its territory but also an attack on Soviet-Moroccan co-operation.

This could only please the United States at a time when an unprecedentedly strong economic delegation was visiting Morocco to help boost its ailing economy. The Kingdom has been hit not only by the costly war but also by the worst drought since independence in 1956.

To crown the visit, Mr. Alaou's French-language newspaper Maroc Soir published an editorial in English stressing that Morocco was defending in the disputed former Spanish Sahara "the stability of the region and that of the continent."

It said the Kingdom was leading a fight for "the future of Africa, the Western World and the free world" — a message which was clearly in tune with President Reagan's view of international

Sharp rise in U.S. bank rates boosts dollar, depresses stocks

U.S. interest rates, which dashed hopes for a worldwide lowering of the cost of borrowing, boosted the dollar on foreign exchange markets Tuesday and depressed stock markets. The Tokyo share market suffered its worst setback in two months and shares also fell in London, other European centres and the Far East after Monday's heavy selloff on Wall Street.

The upward movement of U.S. interest rates following days of uncertainty led to a rush of money into the dollar and out of other major currencies, dealers said.

In Frankfurt the dollar rose to its highest level for four and half months at 2.3620 marks, while in Tokyo the yen fell to a threemonth low of 233.75 to the dollar despite intervention by the Bank of Japan to sell about $100 mil-

Dealers said markets seemed to be facing another period of volatility, with governments likely to be very worried about depreciation of their currencies against the firming dollar.

Although operators rushed to bid for the dollar in all centres, dealers reported nervousness about the extent to which central banks might seek to protect their currencies, although no significant intervention was reported in Eur-

Egypt strikes new oil find

CAIRO (A.P.) - The Egyptian Petroleum Organisation and Shell-Winning, a subsidiary of the Dutch-owned oil company, announced Tuesday what both termed a "significant" oil find in Egypt's western desert.

A Shell-Winning spokesman said oil was discovered in their 6.700 square kilometre Badr El Din concession. The find was made at a depth of 11,000 feet and tests showed the well could produce 6,000 barrels a day of 39 api quality crude - a good lowsulphur rating.

"This is probably one of the most significant findings in the area," he said, but cautioned more tests and drilling must be made to assess if the entire has commercial production possibilities.

West Germany, France, Britain and Japan were reported to have informally agreed last month to lower interest rates to stimulate their economies and to try to limit any upward movement by the dollar similar to last year's surges when U.S. interest rates were around 20 per cent. The Bundesbank, West Germany's central bank, recently cut its lending rate in what some analysts regarded as a gamble to boost a stagnant economy suffering from rising unemployment. But despite the pressure on the U.S. from other nations to get interest rates down to aid world recovery, two banks Monday raised their base rate on business loans to 16.5 per cent from 15.75 per cent, which had prevailed for two months. Other major American banks are expected to follow suit.

osited in Europe moved up by three-quarters of a percentage point Tuesday, and one question was whether European domestic rates would soon start going up. The American economy is in recession and higher U.S. rates could damage recovery, but at the same time a surging money supply if unchecked could boost inflation,

Stocks decline

Higher interest rates are bad for stock markets and the New York stock exchange Monday recorded its sharpest decline in five months. The Dow Jones industrial average fell 19.41 points to 851.69, the largest drop since August 24. New York analysts were surprised by the steep slide, which followed a 28-point jump in the average during the preceding two sessions. Some said recent money supply figures were probably an aberration, and the market should soon start rising again.

In Tokyo dealers said investors were concerned about the upward trend of U.S. interest rates, which was likely to cause an outflow of funds invested in Japanese com-panies to higher-yielding money accounts in U.S. dollars. The Tokyo stock market indicator was down 81.79 at 7.828 points.

Hong Kong stocks closed at or near their lows for the day with the Hang Seng index falling 25.87 points to 1,390.15. Singapore. Sydney, Frankfurt and Zurich also were down, while the London stock market's Financial Times index of industrials dropped 7.9 to 564.1 after being down further at mid-morning.

sent living standards."

LONDON (R) — The voice of British industry Tuesday challenged the government's assertion that the country was pulling out of recession, insisting there was still no sign of imminent economic recovery.

The Confederation of British Industry (CBI) which represents the nation's main employers, said a detailed survey of industrial trends showed "no evidence of any significant improvement in demand and output in the next four months."

Its prognosis contrasted with recent optimistic statements from Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and ministers who have told Britons that things are beginning to get better.

The analysis also foreshadowed more job losses ahead, with uneimployment already at a record level after surging through the three million mark for the first time last month. It said 42 per cent of firms surveyed expected to cut jobs in the next four months and only six per cent were likely to take on workers. The survey also showed 77 per cent of firms were still operating below full capacity, and one CBI economist described the economic scene as "flat as a pancake."

The CBI said the only encclearly irked Mrs. Thatcher. Russian trousers go short MOSCOW (R) - Workers in the Soviet Republic of Byelorussia face a serious shortage of trousers over the next few years, the government daily newspaper Izvestia said Monday.

Officials of the Western republic's trade ministry, asked about chronic shortages in Byelorussian shops, told Izvestia "we don't have any trousers and we don't foresee any."

The newspaper said that production of working trousers would be 18 per cent down on 1981. Output of overalls, shoes and warm working clothes would also be well down and lag far behind demand. "In other words: we didn't have much before and now we have

Saudis face intense pressure to cut oil output believe Saudi Arabia faces intense pressure within OPEC to cut its-oil output sharply and give more of the market to other OPEC exporters who have failed to rebuild sales in the lingering glut, industry sources said Monday.

As Saudi and other Gulfoil ministers conferred in Riyadh, oil company executives in London said Saudi output may already have drifted below a ceiling of 8.5 million barrels daily.

But they added they had so far heard no Saudi announcement that it had been cut far enough to make adequate room in the market for those members of OPEC (the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries) hardest hit by a buyer revolt.

Industry sources said Algeria, Libya, Iran and Kuwait need the Saudis to cut by around two million barrels daily.

Market analysts see a Saudi output cut as the obvious way to avert the risk that hard-pressed sellers might wreck OPEC in a scramble to discount or trim official prices unilaterally. Libya and Algeria are already bartering oil, a way of making hidden discounts, market sources said. Iran has offered discounts in the form of ext-

LONDON (R) - Oil companies ended repayment periods to potential ouvers.

Some analysts speculate that, instead of getting Saudi output down, OPEC could try to tackle the glut by reducing prices acrossthe-board, lowering the "ben-chmark" rate of $34 a barrel for Saudi Arabian light crude on which all OPEC official contract quotes are aligned.

But the Petroleum Intelligence Weekly pointed out Monday that this would not stimulate a revival in demand fast enough to help OPEC in 1982. The New York oil industry newsletter, which is also distributed in London, said oil prices have plunged on the Rotterdam spot market, where noncontract deals are made. "because refiners simply do not need more crude oil now.'

"So a one-dollar OPEC price cut solves nothing," one refiner told PIW.

OPEC next meets in Quito on May 20 but that would be too late to help exporters trying to clinch contracts for the April-June quarter. PIW said some exporters want an earlier emergency ses-

Some weeks later, there will be an improvement in the quality of meals served on European flights, and meals will be available on more European flights than before. Oil glut may slacken efforts to develop alternative energy

KUWAIT (R) - The world oil lasting phenomenon, the Occglut is beginning to hit the development of alternative energy and will harm developing oil states, the Organisation of Arab Petroleum Exporting Countries (OAPEC) said Tuesday.

The nine-nation group said a recent move by the Occidental Corporation to halt a $4 billion project to develop oil shale in Colorado was an "alarming-indicator."

OAPEC said in its monthly bulletin that the shut-down, while not necessarily signalling the abandonment of all alternative energy projects, could sound ominous

"By making the present glut in the oil market appear as a longidental precedent could shake the belief in the urgency of developing alternative energy sources, Kuwait-based OAPEC said. Given that it took up to 10 years to develop non-oil energy sources such as coal and shale, the present oil surplus could slacken efforts to develop energy alternatives, harming everyone, especially developing oil countries, it said. Recession in the West and energy conservation have sharply reduced oil demand, and production by the 13-nation Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) has slumped to just over 20 million barrels a day from 31 million in 1979, oil analysts say.

leave it to be dictated by market

Oil analyst Michael Unsworth. with London brokers Scott, Goff Hancock, said that would presumably mean that, although the "benchmark" OPEC price stayed at $34, some non-Saudi crudes would have to be cheapened to make them more competitive.

OPEC could do that by changing the differentials -- premiums or discounts around the "benchmark" applied to reflect the varying yield of different oils in refinery products.

So, if the Saudis do not yield to pressure for an executive decision to turn down the tap, the consumer might be able to look forward to a further modest fall in the

LONDON STOCK MARKET

LONDON (R) - Share prices closed above lows Tuesday, having opened broadly lower in the wake of the decline on Wall Street Monday. At 1500 the F.T. index was down 6.3 at 565.7 compared with an opening low of 560.2.

The rise in U.S. interest rates pushed government bonds down by ¾ point at the outset, but a technical rally confined the fall to about half a point, while equities also reduced earlier falls with some issues closing unchanged on the day.

Gold shares, American and Canadian stocks were all easier. ICI finished 6p higher on the day at 336 after a low of 326 while Glaxo, Bowater, Distillers, B.P. and Thorn EMI were little changed on balance.

Falls of 2p to 5p were noted in Shell, Beecham, Blue Circle, Plessey and Unilever. Reed International ended 2p off at 276 after interim results in line with the lower end of market expectations, dealers said.

Banks and insurances ended mixed but with a firmer bias.

New Zealand prepares for Spain

Rugby-mad nation turned soccer fanatics

WELLINGTON (R) — After the longest qualifying campaign in World Cup history, New Zealand's soccer team is preparing for Spain - propelled in a few months from the backwaters into the mainstream of the game.

The team's 15-match struggle to reach the final tournament transformed rugby-mad New Zealand into a nation of soccer fanatics, and secured once and for all the public's confidence in the quality of its players.

In December New Zealand faced the apparently impossible task of beating Saudi Arabia 5-0 in their last scheduled qualifying game to force a play-off with China. They did just that and went on to reach the finals by defeating the Chinese 2-1 in the cloying humidity of Singapore's National Stadium last month. In 15 matches, the team lost only once, drew five times and scored 44 goals while conceding

Four World Cup records tum-bled on the way. No other nation has ever had to play as many qualifying games, or achieved their 4-1-goal aggregate, or equalled their 13-0 victory over Fiji, the highest score ever in a World Cup game. Finally the team's run of nine games without conceding a goal - between their April 25 draw with Australia and their October 10 loss to Kuwait - is the longest in cup history.

We don't want to mess about now we have made the last 24 teams to play in Spain. We want to play in a group that includes one of the famous sides, nothing less," Summer said.

"We must use the finals to learn, to improve our game and to give the game back home a momentum that will continue for some time. The best way to do that is to

Ban on New Zealand athletes partially lifted

AUCKLAND (R) - A world-wide ban on New Zealand amateur athletes Lorraine Moller and Ann Audain has been partially lifted, New Zealand Amateur Athletic Association Chairman Ian Boyd said Tuesday.

They have been cleared to run in amateur events in New Zealand and Boyd said a total clearance from the London-based International Amateur Athletics Federation is being pursued.

The pair, plus another New Zealander, Allison Roe, were banned last year after they said they had taken prize money for a U.S. road race. Roe was later reinstated after the American governing body, The Athletics Congress (TAC) accepted her winnings went into a trust fund.

Boyd said Moller and Audain were given a domestic clearance after TAC had transferred their money to a trust.

Roe and Moller are first and third respectively in world marathon

The English-born captain's on-field guidance has been a major factor in the team's success. but the men recognised that the architects of the country's World Cup bid are coach-manager John Adshead, assistant coach Kevin Fallon and New Zealand cup committee director Charlie Dem-

Adshead, Manchester-born but a New Zealand resident for several years, has often clashed with the New Zealand Football Association. With is contract shortly up for renewal he faced the sack if the team did not produce results.

'When that happens, you have to take a long look and ask should I get out?' But I knew where I was going," he said. "So I decided to hell with them. I'll do it in spite of

"I have to admit to a little glow inside just now, a lot of selfsatisfaction. The track I've always been on has been proved right."

The Singapore victory caused a wave of national elation, filling newspaper front pages for two days. It brought a promise of fin-ancial reward which will strengthen the game here for years, as well as unprecedented international recognition for the New Zealand team.

But the side has a difficult time ahead. As veteran striker Brian Turner, who hopes to play his 100th match for New Zealand in Spain, remarked recently: "We've won the battle. Now here come's

Captain Steve Sumner has no illusions about his side's hopes of overthrowing soccer's top nations. Conceding the Kiwis have no chance of winning the World Cup, Summer says the team will still make a major contribution to the

"We play an exciting brand of soccer. I don't think anyone can deny that." he said.

Sumner believes his team has a duty to perform well after its gruelling effort to qualify. "We can't let ourselves down." he said, "it would undo much of the good we have achieved. That would be tra-

Fallon, coach of New Zealand first division side Gisborne City, is regarded at the team's taskmaster -- a hard worker at training sessions and a stickler for fitness. His Job during the campaign has been to coach the side's defence, and the team's nine-game run without Conceding a goal was a personal triumph.

Dempsey, an expatriate Scot with a reputation for the uncompromising nature of his administration, dreams of a match between New Zealand and his native Scotland.

"What a dream match that would be ... with New Zealand winning of course," he said.

Assessing his players, coach Adshead said: "We've never looked to have outstanding players. We've had players who know their jobs, we've attempted to organise them well and I think Kevin (Fallon) and I have made few mistakes."

But the big thing about this squad has been character. The way we have lived together, got on together and played for each other-you don't normally see that in football teams."

It's difficult to believe that it's all over, that we've got the result we wanted," Adshead said in Singapore. "It'll probably hit us in a few days' time..." "and then,

Erika Hess wins her 2nd gold

SCHLADMING, Austria (R) -Switzerland's Erika Hess claimed her second gold medal of the world alpine ski championships when she won the women's giant slalom Tuesday on the strength of a devastating first run.

Hess. 19, who won the new combined event on Sunday, was in scintillating form on the hard, icy course, completing the two legs in two minutes 37.17 seconds, 0.78 seconds ahead of American Christin Cooper, who took the silver. The bronze medal went to Urzula Konzett of Liechtenstein, while her compatriot Petra Wenzel, fastest on the second run, finished fourth. Pre-race favourite Irene Epple of West Germany, the World Cup giant slalom leader, did not find the conditions to her liking and finished a lowly 14th. Tension is building up in Schladming in anticipation of Wednesday's men's giant slalom which should be a continuation of thethrilling duel between the two titans of the event, American Phil Mahre, the World Cup holder, and Sweden's Ingemar.Stenmark.

Connors fined, suspended from Grand Prix tennis

NEW YORK (R) - Jimmy Connors has been suspended from the Grand Prix men's tennis circuit for 21 days after accumulating $5,000 in fines during the last 12 months.

The Men's International Professional Tennis Council announced the automatic suspension Monday and said it would take effect immediately.

Connors went over the $5,000 limit last Saturday when he was fined $1,000 for making an obscene gesture during a semifinal match against Chris Hooper at the U.S. pro indoor championships in Philadelphia.

Connors, who lost to John McEnroe in the final at Phierning body of the Grand Prix circuit, is comprised of three player representatives, three tournament

PARIS (A.P.) - Branco Zutic of Yugoslavia apparently has lost his job as coach of the Cameroon natonal soccer team and officials are in the market for a new man with an international reputation before this year's World Cup com-

The French sports daily l'Equipe, in a report from Yaounde,

Cameroon soccer coach reportedly fired Cameroon, said Tuesday no official reason was given for Zutic's dismissal. But it quoted sources in 'sports circles" as saying that at the "international level to which Cameroon has now risen, the qualities of the Yugoslav coach are no longer sufficient." Zutic has coached the "Indomitable Lions" for the past two years and led them to a place in this year's World Cup finals in Spain. The Cameroonians also have high hopes for the Africa Cup of nations next month in Tripoli, Libya.

Assistant coach Atangana Ottou will continue in his present position, no matter who is chosen to replace Zutic, the report said. Since Jan. 5, 33 players have been selected as possibles for Tripoli or the World Cup and currently are training in Yaounde.

Davey Moore wins WBA title

TOKYO (R) - American Davey Moore won the World Boxing Association (WBA) lightmiddleweight boxing title when he knocked down title-holder Tadashi Mihara of Japan three times in the sixth round here Tuesday

In the decisive sixth, Moore landed a right to the face to send the champion to the canvas for a mandatory eight count.

Mihara, making his first defence of the title, got up but the American swarmed all over him to floor him twice more before the fight was halted.

Conventions can be taken to extremes. It is hard to believe that several international experts were involved on this deal, from a recent tournament in England.

North-South were using a weak no trump of 12-14 points. Perhaps it was the form of competition that persuaded North to try for the no trump game rather than four hearts, but to us North shattered several canons of bidding.

First, four of a major suit is generally a more satisfactory contract than is three no trump, Second, with an unbalanced hand you should al. ways strive for a suit contract. And finally, North should want to become declarer to protect his king of clubs from possible decapita. tion at the opening gun. Obviously, it takes a diamond lead to hold North to eleven tricks at a heart contract. It would seem that three hearts at North's second turn was an "automatic" bid.

However, North-South were saved by the fact that East-West were playing one of those modern carding conventions that we both dislike heartily. It requires the opening leader's partner, if he cannot beat any of the first two cards played to the first trick, to play his secondhighest card in the suit. As a result, when West led the king of diamonds, East followed with the nine. Now West knew that his partner had either the ten or jack of diamonds, but he didn't know which. He also didn't know whether his partner liked the suit or not. Since in some circumstances giving declarer a diamond trick might be his ninth trick, West chose toshift to the queen of clubs. Declarer ended up with eleven tricks and a top board.

Oh, for good old-fashioned bridge. Partner leads a high diamond and East plays the nine, saying he likes the suit. Partner continues the suit and the defenders take the first five tricks. Very dif-

Soviet police open a museum of rogues

By Ralph Boulton

MOSCOW --- The most notorious villains and political renegades in the Soviet Union's history have been assembled under one roof in central Moscow as part of a campaign to spruce up the image of the Soviet policeman.

The new Museum of the Interior Ministry (MVD), opening to the public this month, relates the early history of the Soviet police and its battle against anti-Communist insurgents and cut-

They deal with straightforward cases of crime, from murder to petty theft and are generally regarded with approval by the population.

That approval is more than matched by the fear and distaste most people feel for the anonymous figures of the KGB security police. The limits of the KGB's powers are ill-defined but it confines itself mainly to the investigation of more serious crime, political dissidence and espionage. According to official statements the crime rate in the Soviet Union is dropping consistently and prison uniforms and handcuffs will eventually become mere exhibits in museums.

But a recent spate of press articles calling for increased vigilance against booliganism and petty theft paints a somewhat bleaker picture.

Yuri Churbanov, first deputy interior minister, recently lashed out at some film directors and novelists for portraying gun-toting villains as "some kind of supermen".

The authority of the Soviet police may be founded firmly on the traditions of the Chekists but it needed the support of writers and artists, he told the Communist Party daily Pravda.

These days dangerous criminals are (sometimes) portrayed as 'lost sheep'. Their fate is blamed on parents, society, friends or anybody but themselves," he complained.

Television, cinema and stage artists should devote more energy to extolling the virtues of the "men in the grey overcoats", he Alexander Fyodorov, public relations officer of the MVD Museum, acknowledged growing problems from certain types of crime.

"Different times pose different tasks. We eradicated organised professional crime in the 1930s -there is no Mafia in the Soviet Union. Our main duty is to maintain order, to fight such things as hooliganism and drunkenness,"

"One of our biggest problems now is a lack of organisation in the economy which encourages some types of crime, such as pilfering and fraud, especially on the railways. Also, where there are shortages this leads to blackmarketeering," he added.

One recent newspaper report described how two men broke open a wagon-load of shoes and cooly distributed them to a crowd drawn to the scene by the prospect of a "bargain".

More frequent reports refer to large-scale theft from factories producing luxury goods such as igarettes and chocolates. The daily Sovietskaya Rossiya (Soviet Russia) protested recently that workers often sold goods immediately outside the gates of the factory from which they had stolen them.

As practice shows, there is usually only one aim in these deals to scrape together money for a bottle of cheap wine which is then drunk without any delay." the newspaper said.

"Why have we not finished with such degenerate manifestiations?" the newspaper asked.

"One is forced to the conclusion thr.t the measures taken by the law enforcement organs are clearly inadequate," it said.

References to police corruption are now appearing more fre-quently in the official media.

The authorities in several republics of the Soviet Union have taken action against police and interior ministry officials following the discovery of blackmarket rings.

The chairman of the Kirghizian Supreme Court was fired last year and several officials were severely reprimanded when an investigation found that several black marketeers had escaped prosecution and many others had received inexplicably mild sentences after conviction.

There have also been reports of disciplinary measures against police officers in the Soviet capital for corruption.

Recent newspaper reports suggest that the Department to Combat Hooliganism and Speculation (OBKS), which investigates theft and embezzlement of state property, is being expanded to cope with the problem But the size of the police force is

"It is one of those things, like the size of the army or navy, which we like to keep a secret. We have enough officers for the job," the MVD Museum's public relations officer explained.

New Paris airport makes old giant seem insignificant

PARIS — "Don't go to the wrong air terminal": in the French newspapers, this advertisement headline catches the eye. Passengers of Air France going to London, Mancheser, Amsterdam and Vienna are warned that, in the future, they must go to the new terminal of the Charles de Gaulle airport.

Roissy II, after Orly and Roissy L is the last-born of Parisian airports - a birth which is always a special event. For airports can follow each other at regular intervals without resembling each other. At Roissy 11, there's no sign of the revolutionary architecture and technical prowess of Roissy I; of course, the latter remains a model of its kind - with its circular concrete architecture, with its network of moving belts taking you to the "satellites", Roissy I is a functional and efficient tool. But it never really won public favour, who consider it too cold, too enclosed. And, over the years, this crown of concrete, which could not be enlarged, has been found to be too small.

Hence the creation of Roissy Π , And a complete change. Here we are back to a much more classic form, more like the style of Orly. which remains the airport model the most exported in the world. But Roissy, behind its conventional appearance, is radically new. Better than any other, it reconciles a number of very different needs: the comfort of passengers. safety, reliability and profitability of the equipment and fittings. A wager had to be taken on the natare and the changing volume of traffic in the years to come ... and not be mistaken. Three million hours of work and an investment of 1.5 thousand million francs went into the building of Roissy II.

With the year 2000 in mind, it will consist of a succession of oval rings composed of two modules each capable of receiving five million passengers per year. Inside each ring (only the first is in service today) is a large space 210 metres long, with a view over the runways, a row of blue and red armchairs, a white marble floor and coloured terra cotta floors, walls in stainless metal, glass roofs. In other words, a warm, human sho-

In the centre of each ring are 5,000 car-park emplacements on five storeys and a transversal highway. From the travelator to the aircraft, a distance of 70 metres, no more. And not a single step to climb. You can almost "run to catch a plane", as the promoters claim, before take-off.

Air-France will have exclusive use of the first ring and, as a general rule, of the three others. loo. The airline thus leaves its Roissy i. handing it over to eleven companies which were installed at Orly until now, including "Alitalia", "Lufthansa" and "Swissair". But the "moving bouse" of "Air France" and a part of "Air Inter" will take place gradually, keeping pace with the increase in air traffic. which is 15 per cent per year on the average. For Paris Airport dealt with 20 million passengers in 1978 but will cater for 28 million in 1981, including 11 million for Reissy I alone, which is saturated.

Journalism: a risky job for Thais

By Catherine Campbell

BANGKOK - Journalists in Thailand run serious risks of becoming headlines in their own newspapers.

Journalist gunned down," "Reporter, photographer missing, believed killed," "Editor shot "Editor shot dead in office," - such items appear frequently in Thailand's otherwise flourishing and relatively free press.

Since 1979 more than 30 joumalists have been killed and scores attacked, wounded or threatened, according to civil rights lawyer Thongbai Thongpao, who has compiled a list of the casualties.

Mr. Thongbai, the legal adviser for several Thai newspapers and reporters' associations, also has spent the past two years pressing insurance companies to provide life insurance for reporters. So far, he has failed.

Polish justice minister says 4,000 jailed since Dec. 13

WARSAW (R) — Justice Minister Sylwester Zawadzki was quoted Tuesday as saying that more than 4,000 people were interned under martial law in Poland.

In an interview with the government daily Rzeczpospolita, Prof. Zawadzki said 1,300 people had been released since the military crackdown on Dec. 13.

But there were still 4,177 internees, including 298 women. The minister said they were being humanely treated, and he dismissed as fantasy western reports of severe conditions in some camps.

Bonn postpones decision on new job-creation plan

BONN (R) — Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's left-liberal coalition unexpectedly decided Tuesday that further talks were needed on a controversial multibillion-dollar job creation scheme, political sources said.

The issue, over which Mr. Schmidt has threatened to resign. seemed largely resolved last night after nine hours of talks between the chancellor, senior ministers, and leaders of the ruling Social Democratic and Free Democratic parties (SPD and FDP).

But the sources said Mr. Schmidt's comment that there was accord on the "broad outlines" apparently meant only that the coalition had agreed a job programme must be implemented and one would be finally approved by the Bonn cabinet Wednesday.

Final accord had not yet been reached on details such as the size of the programme and how it should be financed, and a fresh round of talks to hammer out agreement is being held this evening, they said.

A planned meeting between Mr. Schmidt and key ministers concerned with the economy was being postponed until Wednesday, just before the regular weekly cabinet meeting, they added.

U.S. plans to send El Salvador military aid worth $55 million

WASHINGTON, (R) - The United States plans to send an additional $55 million worth of helicopters and military supplies to El Salvador on an emergency basis.

The administration will also ask Congress for a further $100 million in weapons and economic aid despite warnings by democrats that the United States might become involved in a Vietnam-type. conflict in the area.

Assistant Secretary of State Thomas Enders told House of Representatives and Senate subcommittees Monday the aid was required because "the decisive battle for Central America is under way in El Salvador."

The administration has accused the Soviet Union and Cuba of supplying weapons to guerrillas in El Salvador and considers a leftwing victory there would reverberate throughout the region.

Opponents of more aid to El Salvador were advised that Con-gress could block the $55 million arms proposal only by passing an unprecedented law banning the president from using his emergency powers to send the aid. The administration does not need congressional approval for the emergency supplies to El Salvador, which Mr. Enders said will come from pentagon stores. About $25 million worth of the equipment would be helicopters to replace those destroyed by guemillas last week in an attack on El Salvador's biggest air force base. Mr. Enders said the administration would also be seeking additional aid for Honduras, because the Cubans were trying to unify left-wing factions there. Asked why the administration considered the Salvadorean situation justified emergency arms aid, Mr. Enders replied: "For if after Nicaragua, El Salvador is captured by a violent minority, who in South America will not live in fear?" Democratic Sen. Claiborne Pell of Rhode Island said this reminded him of administration arguments for U.S. aid in Southeast

Both President Ronald Reagan and former President Jimmy Carter contacted the two women to urge them to halt their protest and assure them that U.S. authorities were doing everything they could to secure them exit visas.

Before she was driven to hospital, however, Miss Vashchenko told reporters she was determined to continue the hunger strike. When hospital officials said on Sunday that she had started taking solids, the other Pentecostalists

Papandreou, Schmidt start talks in Bonn

BONN (R) - Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt began talks Tuesday with little chance of Bonn supporting Greece's ambitions for special treatment in NATO and the European Common Market.

Bonn government spokesman Kurt Becker said Monday that West Germany rejected any idea of a special role for individual members of the North Atlantic Alliance or of the European Economic Community (EEC).

Informed West German sources said Mr. Papandreou was hoping for Bonn's support in gaining NATO guarantees of security for its border against Turkey, a fellow-member of the alliance.

The Greek socialist leader and Mr. Schmidt scheduled an hour of private discussions, followed by a EEC because so much of its ecoourages were taking part. Informed West German sources said the main theme of the talks would be Greece's uncompromising attitude within

NATO and the EEC. They said the chancellor also intended to broach the question of Greece's refusal to approve any kind of sanctions against Warsaw or Moscow, or to condemn the Soviet Union over the military crackdown in Poland.

Mr. Papandreou has voiced concern over the military might of Turkey, with which it is at loggerheads over control of the Aegean Sea as well as over the occupation of northern Cyprus since 1974 by Turkish forces.

He is also demanding that Greece be given special status in the working lunch in which their ent- nomy is devoted to agriculture.

Harold Deadman, a Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) expert, was testifying at the trial of Mr. Williams. Police say the two young men he is accused of killing were the last victims in a series of killings which terrorised the city for two years.

He said more than 600 fibres and dog hairs found on the bodies of 10 victims-not the two Mr. Williams is accused of killing--"had the same microscopic characteristics" as things in Mr. Williams' possession at one time or another and could have come from the same source.

When he testified two weeks ago, Mr. Deadman said it was possible to make comparisons between fibres but not to say definitely whether they came from the same source.

Prosecutors used his earlier testimony on dog hairs and fibres in Mr. Williams' bedspread, blanket and carpet, to suggest a link between the defendant and his alleged victims, Nathaniel Cater, 27. and Jimmy Ray Payne, 21.

Mr. Deadman Monday revealed new alleged fibre links between Mr. Williams and 10 other murder victims.

Fibres like those from the defendant's violet and green bedspread and like the "very unusual" type of yellowish green fibres in his bedroom carpet were found on all but two of these 10 victims, Mr. Deadman said.

He said there was no way to be certain the fibres actually came from objects in Mr. Williams' possession and he could only identify them as being of certain kinds and colours.

A yellow acrylic and rayon bianket on Mr. Williams' bed contained fibres similar to those found on many of the victims' bodies, the FBI agent testified.

Americans hang on in Libya in spite of Washington's tactics

By Robert McCartney The Associated Press

ROME - SOME AMERICANS IN LIBYA are ignoring their govemment's call to leave, and Libyan immigration police have helped a few to flout the ban on travel there, according to reports from the North African country.

Of the 1,500 Americans who were living in Libya on Dec. 10, most left when the U.S. State Department urged them to depart because they supposedly weren't safe there. The U.S. action followed reports that Libyan leader Col. Muammar Qadhafi had sent assassins to murder President Ronald Reagan.

But a few Americans say they're hanging on, reluctant to give up high-paying jobs or uproot their

"My wife and I will stay as long as it's legal. We don't feel in any physical danger, and I'd like at least for my son to finish the school year in June," said Skender Brame, a 46-year-old native of Cleveland, Ohio, reached by telephone in the Libyan capital of Tripoli. He has worked for 10 years as recreation director at the oil companies school for foreign children there.

At least a dozen other Americans are planning to stay, and maybe more, according to Mr. Brame and other Americans in Tripoli. They have the legal right to do so, as long as they don't leave the North African country and then return.

"There's always going to be this element. I'm sure some Americans are still living in Hanoi," one U.S. oil executive in Tripoli szid.

The U.S. government didn't set a deadline when it urged Americans to leave Libya. The White House said it hoped the departure would be "expeditious," and the State Department predicted nearly all Americans would be gone by the end of January.

The government threatened once to impose unspecified sanctions if necessary to force U.S. citizens to leave. Later, however, U.S. State Department officials in Washington admitted privately that they had little. if any, power to make the Americans go.

Singapore premier fluis room for more U.S. power in Indian Ocean

WASHINGTON (R) -- The United States will eventually need another fleet in the Indian Ocean to match the growth of Soviet naval power there, -Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew of Singapore said in a magazine interview published Tuesday.

He told the U.S. News and World Report that parts of the U.S. Seventh Fleet in the Pacific Ocean and the Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean were being used in the Indian Ocean on a rotating basis.

"You (the United States) can't have Japan and your partners in Western Europe dependent for two-thirds of their oil upon the (Arabian) Gulf and have your fleet in such a perilous state now that the British have withdrawn from east of Suez," Mr. Lee said.

"At some stage you will need another fleet for the Indian Ocean."

Waldheim gets Austrim foreign ministry post

VIENNA (R) — Kurt Waldheim, former secretarygeneral of the United Nations: has formally resumed work at the Austrian foreign ministry but the question of what he will actually do is still open, ministry sources said Tuesday.

The question has aroused speculation because of a U.N. ruling barring a retiring secretary-general from taking a government post in which confidential information he may have acquired could be a source of embarrassment to other countries. Austria's Chancellor Bruso Kreisky said last month that Mr. Waldheim, a member of the Austrian diplomatic service and foreign minister before be became U.N. chief in 1972, would become a special envoy to international organisations. However, the foreign ministry sources said the question of Mr. Waldheim's eventual post was still open. The sources said Mr. Waldheim formally resumed with in the foreign ministry Mosday at the rank of gesandier (envoy), the second-highest in the ministry scale. Top is botschafter (ambassador), of which there are only five.

Cop describes escape from crocodile jaws

SALISBURY (R) — A Zimbabwean police officer has described how he wrestled free from a crocodile which gripped his head in its jaws, the Herald newspaper reported Tuesday. It qouted Superintendent Andrew Theunissen as saying he was swimming in Lake Kariba two weeks ago when the reptile seized him. "My instantaneous impression was of the terrible crunching noise," he said. "Seconds later I realised I had been seized by a croc-that my head was in its jaws. The frightening cracking sound grew louder. "I put up my arms and pulled on the lower jaw with all my strength. The crocodile threshed about wildly, but I hung on and kept on pulling the jaw down. I saw the terrible sight of rows of teeth on the upper jaw.' Then suddenly I was free."

He was treated in hospital for a fractured cheekbone, cuts to his face and arms, a deep wound in the back of his bead and severed finger tendons. The left side of his face is par-
